Fall 2018

Dear colleagues and customers,

As we continue to grow our textbook list, we’re receiving encouraging compliments from our authors, series editors, and customers about the breadth of the list and the quality of our publishing. Enthusiastic reviews and a variety of book awards reinforce those opinions.

In Education, we are delighted to introduce some of our excellent new projects, several in STEM including Revolutionary STEM Education by Jeremiah J. Sims, (Under)Represented Latin@s in STEM by Yuen, Bonner and Arreguin-Anderson and Best Practices in STEM Education, Second Edition, edited by Spuck, Jenkins, Rust and Dou. A welcome second edition of the Joe L. Kincheloe classic, Classroom Teaching debuts this fall with additional material from Dr. Shirley R. Steinberg. We are pleased to introduce the new Open Access journal, Philosophy and Theory in Higher Education, edited by John E. Petrovic, available at the end of the year.

We are pleased to offer our textbooks in not only print but digital formats available through Amazon (Kindle), Apple (iBooks), Barnes & Noble Nook, Bibliotech, Blackwell Learning, Feedbooks, Follett, Google Play, ITSI Education, Kobo, Kortext, Lix, Microsoft, PaperC, Rethink Books, Sainsbury’s, VitalSource, Wook, Zola Academic and more! Exam copies are available for all of our classroom books—I encourage you to look closely at the titles in this catalogue and request copies of those volumes that would be of use in your classroom. I also invite you to consider us as your next publisher—if you are working on a manuscript or prospectus in any of our publication fields, let one of our friendly acquisitions editors know. I am certain that you will find the publishing process with Peter Lang a rewarding experience.

Best wishes,

Fearless Engagement of Four Arrows

The True Story of an Indigenous-Based Social Transformer

The True Story of an Indigenous-Based Social Transformer

Race, Culture & Education

In times of extreme cascading global crises facing humanity, all responsible humans need to re-evaluate the dominant worldview that has brought us to this point of facing extinction. As a species we need to learn the «good» ways from our greatest allies in Nature and from Indigenous cultures that lived in relative harmony with Nature. Equally, we need to learn the best ways to think critically and act on the holistic understanding that may guide us beyond our individual and collective traumas and illnesses cast forth like chains upon modern societies through elites who manipulate fear. Fearless Engagement of Four Arrows offers a unique strong «medicine» for the re-construction of a healthy, sane, and sustainable future for all. Utilizing the form of an intellectual biography of Four Arrows (aka Dr. Don Trent Jacobs) and his daring activist life and true teaching stories, the author creates a powerful adventure into the firey philosophy, activism, and emancipatory inspirations of one of the world’s great visionary prophetic educators and social transformers. Through a number of unique experiences, including firefighting, white-water kayaking, wild horse training, world-class athletic competitions, and counter-cultural activism, Four Arrows has become a connoisseur of fear and courage. This book shows how he walks a universal ethical path of fearlessness at a time when too many remain trapped by their fears. Among other readers, high school teachers and post-secondary teachers across diverse disciplines will find great ideas, eliciting dialogues and study questions for students, who now face a globalizing world where they can take charge of the future via fearlessness.

Ideal for undergraduate and graduate courses in cultural studies, environmental studies, philosophy, Indigenous studies, educational studies, and cultural diversity.

White Fatigue: Rethinking Resistance for Social Justice explores how, despite the pleas and research of critical scholars, what passes for multicultural education in schools is often promotion of human relations and tolerance rather than a sustained critical examination of how race and racism shape social, political, economic, and educational opportunities for various groups, both historically and currently. Simultaneously, our nation’s social mores have changed over time and millions of White Americans find racism morally reprehensible. This book illustrates that despite that shift, it is not uncommon to experience White Fatigue in classrooms and other spaces—struggling to understand how racism functions. This struggle is often talked about as White resistance, White guilt, and White fragility. White fatigue is an idea that helps explain and differentiate this struggle for better understanding among White folks who feel racism is wrong but do not yet have an understanding of how racism functions. White Fatigue: Rethinking Resistance for Social Justice ultimately argues that if we are to advance our national conversation on race, educators must be willing to define reactions to conversations about race with more nuances, lest we alienate potential allies, accomplices, and leaders in the fight against racial injustice.

Ideal for undergraduate and graduate courses in curriculum and instruction; multicultural, anti-racist, and social justice education; social foundations; educational psychology; sociology; cultural studies; and political science.

Asian/American Scholars of Education: 21st Century Pedagogies, Perspectives, and Experiences shares the knowledge and travels of Asian/American luminaries in the field of education. This unique collection of essays acknowledges the struggle that Asian/American education scholars have faced when it comes to being regarded as legitimate scholars deserving of endowed or distinguished status. The chapter contributors in this volume include former doctoral students, children, protégés, and colleagues of the Asian/American endowed and distinguished professors featured in the book: A. Lin Goodwin, Suzanne SooHoo, Kioh Kim, Krishna Bista, George Sugai, Yali Zou, Yong Zhao, Robert Teranishi, Asha K. Jitendra, Shoup-ing Hu, and Ming Ming Chiu. Asian/American Scholars of Education makes an important impact by asking: Why are there so few Asian/American endowed and distinguished faculty members in education?

The album Miseducation of Lauryn Hill sold over 420,000 copies in its first week, received ten Grammy nominations, winning five. This book, Celebrating Twenty Years of Black Girlhood: The Lauryn Hill Reader aims to critically engage the work of Ms. Hill, highlighting the interdisciplinary nature of the album. Beyond the album’s commercial success, Ms. Hill’s radical self-consciousness and exuberance for life led listeners through her Black girl journey of love, motherhood, adornment, redempt- tion, spirituality, sexuality, politics, and nostalgia that affirmed the power of creativity, resistance, and the traditional of African storytelling. Ms. Hill’s album provides inspirational energies that serve as a foundational text for Black girlhood. In many ways it is the definitive work of Black girlhood for the Hip Hop generation and beyond because it opened our eyes to a holistic narrative of woman and mother. Twenty years after the release of the album, we pay tribute to this work by adding to the quilt of Black girls’ stories with the threads of feminist consciousness, which are particularly imperative in this space where we declare: Black girls matter. Celebrating Twenty Years of Black Girlhood will be the first book to academically engage the work of the incomparable Ms. Hill. It will intellectually wrestle with the interdisciplinary nature of Ms. Hill’s album, centering the connection between the music of Ms. Hill and the lives of Black girls. The essays in this collection utilize personal narratives and professional pedagogies and invite students, scholars, and readers to reflect on how Ms. Hill’s album influenced their past, present, and future.

In a time of great US and global social unrest and unravelling, Systemic Collapse and Renewal presents a blueprint for how Americans can respond to that unrest by reclaiming and rebuilding our democracy. Part 1 traces the deep, underlying sources of the disintegration and collapse. Through storytelling, case history and ethnography, it examines how a small group of people («elites») used ethnic diversity resulting from a natural pattern of global in-migration to the US as a distraction while they implemented a planned, behind-closed-doors strategy to seize the democracy, ruin the middle class and deprive a once proud people of an expectation that their government will be «by, for and of the people.» With the former representative democracy «hi-jacked» by these greedy interests, Systemic Collapse and Renewal demonstrates that it remains quintessentially American to believe «there can always be a way out,» and that the encroaching acts of fascism by elites can be pushed back and defeated. Tapping into this optimism, Part II of Systemic Collapse and Renewal sets forth a path for democratic renewal. That path begins by examining that which was taken away: the «shared meanings» (or cultural norms, beliefs and behaviors) that are deeply American and can be easily re-taught, celebrated and once again used by Americans to build social cohesion as a country. Departing the recent liberal emphasis on critique and on assigning blame, Part II of Systemic Collapse and Renewal urges a new US educational and social movement based on mutual reliance—and «healing the wounds»—for an increasingly diverse country. Democratic renewal begins with the simple step of sharing our stories and our dreams about how to make a better world.

Ideal for undergraduate and graduate courses in:
- Introduction to American Cultures; Social Foundations in Education; Politics in America; Anthropology of Education; Law; Government and Society; Business and Government; Introduction to Political Economy; Cultural Anthropology; Qualitative Research Methods; Race and Ethnicity in America; Urban Studies; Ethnic Studies; Participatory Democracy; and Agency and the Subject.

[Under]Represented Latin@s in STEM: Increasing Participation Throughout Education and the Workplace presents a critical investigation into Latin@ underrepresentation in STEM.
throughout the education pipeline and workforce. (UnderRepresented Latin@s in STEM highlights nationally relevant research related to the creation of opportunities for Latin@ students in STEM and the ways in which these opportunities increase Latin@ participation in STEM. Of particular interest across the chapters is the notion of building and sustaining a strong STEM identity within Latin@ students. As such, the authors present ideas through various lenses including teacher preparation and transformative teaching strategies, family and community involvement, and innovative programs for minority students. A broad range of STEM fields (including mathematics, robotics, and computer science), grade levels, and learning environments (including informal and formal, rural and urban) are represented throughout the chapters. Thus, (UnderRepresented Latin@s in STEM presents research-based practices that increase Latin@ participation in STEM as a single collection for educators, administrators, and policymakers. In addition to learning about the great efforts that scholars are doing in broadening diversity in STEM, readers will be able to take away ideas for designing and implementing similar educational programs and teaching strategies for their own students.

Ideal for undergraduate and graduate courses in Critical Issues in Education and Policy, Underrepresentation, Diversity, Access, and Teacher and Student Identity in STEM.

Pedagogy of Life: A Tale of Names and Literacy takes its readers through the echoing stories of the half-century historical Cultural Revolution of China to the literate lifeworld today. Rosa Hong Chen offers a gripping array of personal and kindred stories woven into the power of words and empathy of art through the volutes of writing and dancing for life, expressing genera of warm melancholy, weighty sensations, compulsive sobs, and refrained elation. It is for the existential history of individual lives and communal sharing that life creates itself a pedagogical condition of possible experiences. It is so that life itself forms a historical and social path of human growth and maturation. In her philosophical and educational autoethnographical inquiry, Rosa Hong examines the nature of literacy for those under oppression and marginalization; she explores how one’s name and the ways in which that name is used affects a person’s self-knowing and knowing of the world. Therein she presents us an exceptional volume, exemplifying that individuals’ autobiographical stories explored are importantly connected to wider cultural, political, and social meaning and understanding. Pedagogy of Life, Rosa Hong thus echoes her readers’ musings, affects, relations, imagination, choice, learning, teaching, and much more, because we, each and all, have our own names, our ways of uttering, writing and dancing, and, ultimately, our ways of living, knowing, and becoming.

Ideal for undergraduate and graduate courses in Educational Studies; Curriculum Studies; Philosophy of Education; Language and Literacy Courses; Arts Education; Qualitative Research; Creative Writing; and Comparative Language Education.

African Proverbs as Epistemologies of Decolonization calls for a rethinking of education by engaging African proverbs as valuable and salient epistemologies for contemporary times. The book addresses the pedagogical, instructional, and communicative relevance of African proverbs for decolonizing schooling and education in pluralistic contexts by questioning the instructional, pedagogic, and communicative lessons of these proverbs and how they can be employed in the education of contemporary youth. It presents a critical discursive analysis of proverbs from selected African contexts, highlighting the underlying knowledge base that informs these cultural expressions. Explore alongside the book the ways in which these Indigenous teachings can be engaged by schools and educators to further the objective of decolonizing education by providing a framework for character education. This character-based framework equips the learner to be knowledgeable about power, equity, ethics and morality, and to develop a conscience for social responsibility, as well as to embrace traditional notions of self-discipline, probity, and hard work. This text goes beyond the mere documentation of proverbs to tease out how embedded knowledge and cultural referents in these knowledge bases and systems are critical for transforming education for young learners today.

Ideal for courses in Indigenous education and comparative education.
A Revolutionary Subject: Pedagogy of Women of Color and Indigeneity is a call to radical educators, grassroots organizers, and others on the left to recognize the enormous historical legacy of and potential for revolutionary praxis that exists among Women of Color and Indigeneity. Today’s world owes its unmitigated greed, suffering, and unfreedoms to the capitalist production processes that have deformed our humanity, alienating us from our selves and each other and robbing us of our sense of agency. Yet in these darkest hours, we see the glimmers of hope that exist as people become impelled to stand up for justice. As the most hyper exploited peoples on Earth, Indigenous women and Women of Color bring an unparalleled impetus for social change and a diverse ontological and epistemological clarity and creativity that lends promise to the awesome task of creating a better world—one founded on real freedom, equality, and justice. The author also argues for a Marxist-humanist alternative and revitalizes Marx’s dialectics to challenge class-reductionism, arguing for a class struggle that is also necessarily anti-racist, anti-sexist and supports Muslims, LGBTQIA, and all other oppressed groups. A revolutionary critical pedagogy that engages Women of Color and Indigenous women and other identities such as race, class, gender, sexuality, and ability is the only anti-racist, anti-sexist, anti-oppressive pedagogy that remains possible for social change and revolution.

Intersections of Marginality for First-Generation College Students examines the intersecting relationships between a student’s identity as a first-generation college student (FGCS) and other identities such as race, class, LGTBQIA, and spiritual identity. This book breaks new ground by examining highly diverse populations of FGCS, rather than predominantly White undergraduates at four-year public universities. This book examines the intersection of identities that may be marginalized in different ways across a student’s educational journey, in research-grounded chapters that discuss real academic experiences of professors, administrators, staff, graduate students, and undergraduates.

Animals, Disability, and the End of Capitalism: Voices from the Eco-ability Movement is an edited collection of essays from the leaders in the field of eco-ability. Animals, Disability, and the End of Capitalism is rooted in critical pedagogy, inclusive education, and environmental education, and the efforts of diverse disability activists working to weave together the complex diversity and vastly overlooked interconnections among nature, ability, and animals. Eco-ability challenges social constructions, binaries, domination, and normalcy. Animals, Disability, and the End of Capitalism challenges the concept of disability, animal, and nature in relation to human and man. Eco-ability stresses the interdependent relationship among everything and how the effect of one action such as the extinction of a species in Africa can affect the ecosystem in Northern California. Animals, Disability, and the End of Capitalism is timely and offers important critical insight from within the growing movement and the current academic climate for such scholarship. Animals, Disability, and the End of Capitalism shares insights and examples of radical experiences, pedagogical projects, and perspectives shaped by Critical Animal Studies, Critical Environmental Studies, and Critical Disability Studies. Contributing authors include Sarah R. Adams, Marissa Anderson, Judy K.C. Bentley, Mary Fantaske, Ava HaberkornHalm, Hannah Monroe, Nicole Pallotta, Daniel Salomon, and Meneka Thirukkumaran.

As the inevitable, unsustainable nature of contemporary society becomes increasingly more obvious, it is important for scholars and activists to engage with the question, «what is to be done?» This anthology provides an analysis and overview of an under-discussed but important part of the radical environmental movement, the Earth Liberation Front, which actively tried to stop ecocide. Through an engagement with the activism and thought behind the ELF, contributors to the volume encourage the reader to begin questioning the nature of contemporary capitalism, the state, and militarism. The book also explores the social movement and tactical impact of the ELF, as well as the government response to its activism, in order to strengthen our analytic understanding of effectiveness, resistance, and community resilience. By combining classical and contemporary readings of the ELF movement, this anthology is sure to inspire more resistance and anarchy for decades to come. Social justice advocates, anarchists, environmental justice practitioners, and animal liberationists are just a few segments of the population who will benefit from reading this text.

Contemporary Anarchist Criminology: Against Authoritarianism and Punishment edited by Anthony J. Nocella II, Mark Seis, and Jeff Shantz is the first book on anarchist criminology to hit the shelves. Contemporary Anarchist Criminology offers a cutting-edge critical assessment of criminology by creating provocative discussions regarding business as usual in the criminal justice system. This exciting interdisciplinary book explores a diversity of topics that range from the construction of criminal law, to Lombroso, to deviant behavior, to prison abolition, to transformative justice, to restorative justice, to environmental justice, and to the prison industrial complex. Contemporary Anarchist Criminology is a must read book for anyone looking for a serious critique of the criminal justice system, specifically for those in sociology, political science, criminology, peace and conflict studies, and criminal justice. Contemporary Anarchist Criminology is not for the timid, but for those wanting to challenge and dismantle the current forms of domination, oppression and injustice that frame and define the current system of justice.

Ideal for undergraduate and graduate courses in Peace and Justice Studies, Social Movement, Social Justice, Alternatives to Criminology, Peacemaking Criminology, Criminology, Criminal Justice, and Prisons.

Revolutionary STEM Education: Critical-Reality Pedagogy and Social Justice in STEM for Black Males by Jeremiah J. Sims, an educator, researcher, and administrator from Richmond, California, is calling for a revolutionary, paradigm shift in the STEM education of and for Black boys. STEM education has been reliant on axioms and purported facts that for far too long have been delivered in a banking or absorption model that is, arguably, anti-critical. Unsurprisingly, this pedagogical approach to STEM education has failed large segments of students; and, this is especially true of African American males. Revolutionary STEM Education highlights, chronicles, and investigates the potential inroads and vistas of a Saturday Science, Technology, Engineering and Math (STEM) program, Male Aptitudes Nurtured for Unlimited Potential (MAN UP), which was designed to foster interest and competence in STEM by middle school Black boys. This program was impelled by a critical-reality based pedagogical approach, which was formulated to arrive at socio-academic synergy, that is, a thoughtful conjoining of students’ real life concerns, joys, ways of being, and socio-cultural identities and the curricular material covered in the courses offered at MAN UP. Sims’ lived-experiences as an inner-city, low-income Black male are interspersed throughout Revolutionary STEM Education; however, the heartbeat of this book is, undoubtedly, the stories of the positive transformation that the MAN UP scholars experienced while becoming more competent in STEM, developing positive STEM identities, and learning to use their STEM knowledge for social justice.

Keywords in the Social Studies takes words commonly used in social studies education and unsettles them in ways that will redefine the field for years to come. Throughout the book, leading and emerging scholars in social studies education experiment with keywords central to the field seen as either taken for granted (such as family and technology) or perennially contested (such as terrorism and freedom), offering readers new positions, approaches, and orientations to what is possible to teach in the social studies. Focusing on democratic ways of living and being in the world as citizens, this innovative collection offers chapters organized around twenty-six keywords and ten invited responses to survey the unsettled terrain we call «the social studies.» Each chapter attends to a specific keyword selected for both its contemporary applicability to different aspects of K–12 social studies education and to its dominant presence in the curriculum thought that structures social studies education in classrooms, museums, and beyond. Drawing inspiration from Raymond Williams’ work on keywords in culture, over fifty authors discuss complex and contested components of each keyword by way of offering diverse accounts that range from autobiographical narratives to historical genealogies, from critical implications of specific curriculum texts to offering vignettes of classroom teaching that deploy a keyword within historical analysis essays that provide additional context to the larger civil rights movements of the period. The pedagogical issues essays focus on common concerns and disputes that often surround the teaching of civil rights. Lesson plans and related resources addressing the topics highlighted by chapter authors are also included in the book. Social studies and history methods professors and curriculum coordinators will find the book helpful for introducing the teaching of civil rights movements. Pre-service and in-service educators can use the lesson plans and resources as models for their own units of study.

Blood’s Will

Speculative Fiction, Existence, and Inquiry of Currere

New York, 2018

What would you give up to have everything else? In Blood’s Will: Speculative Fiction, Existence, and Inquiry of Currere, this is the question faced by the main character Campbell Cote Phillips, a successful university professor, mother, and wife. Her comfortable life takes an unexpected turn when she discovers that not everything is always as it appears to be. The story unfolds between the 1970s and contemporary Baltimore, weaving together the experiences of Finn (an unusual vampire with a strange history) and Campbell—along with a cast of characters across different generations—whose stories are portrayed in base-relief against the promise, or peril, of immortality. Blood’s Will is about love and desire, but it is also about family, friends, and the choices we all make. To be human is to sacrifice. To be a vampire is to have endless opportunities. As Noel Gough writes, «Understanding curriculum work as a storytelling practice has been a key theme in the reconceptualisation of curriculum studies during the last three decades, encapsulated by Madeleine Grumet’s (1981) formulation of curriculum as ‘the collective story we tell our children about our past, our present, and our future’ (p. 115).» Situated as a story embedded in the four stages of currere (Pinar and Grumet, 1978), the journey of the book’s main characters exemplify the journey of recursion: the regressive, the progressive, the analytical, and the synthetic. The novel is a useful reading for courses examining roles of narrative, fiction, and currere as fields of inquiry. Blood’s Will is an example of speculative fictions that «can contribute to an aspect of effective deliberation that Schwab (1969) called ‘the anticipatory generation of alternatives’ [p. 315]» (Noel Gough).

Ideal for undergraduate and graduate courses in narrative, fiction, and currere as fields of inquiry, and speculative fiction.

Ma is a curriculum. The Japanese concept of ma refers to the interval between two markers. Ma is somatically constructed by a deliberate, attentive consciousness to what simultaneously is expressed, repressed, or suppressed between two structures. In a dialectic exploration, the spaces between—private/public, teacher/student, old/new, self/other, among others are probed in ways that contribute to the significant research in teaching and learning that has been undertaken in the last decades. Material culture is the study of belief systems, behaviours, and perceptions through artefacts and physical objects and is central to the socialisation of human beings into culture. The analysis of cultural materials offer sites for concretizing the self and the self in context. New materiality challenges assumptions and clichés and allows for possibilities not yet imagined, perhaps even inconceivable possibilities. New materiality approaches accept that matter itself has agency. As such, this book investigates the intersections at the core of ma, engagements wherein the investigations create something new, in order to demonstrate the layers of the teaching and learning self. Interpretations of the concept of ma articulate new definitions to improve the conditions, practices, products, and pedagogies of being a teacher/learner in the 21st Century. Ma is a site for epistemological understandings, threshold learnings, and self and curriculumbecomings.

Ideal for undergraduate and graduate courses in curriculum studies and curriculum theory.

Studying Abroad: What We Didn’t See Coming is a collection of testimonials that documents the unexpected outcomes of study-abroad cultural experiences. It highlights the value of such experiences and the throng of interwoven dynamics, and showcases the educational learning opportunities for those who participate and how their teacher preparation is enhanced. Its most valuable aspect, however, is the illumination of those dynamics that caught all participants unaware—unaware of cultural similarities and differences, the power of relationships, the intricacies of language, the universal characteristics of children, and mostly, unaware of themselves. Studying Abroad: What We Didn’t See Coming offers insight to those considering international travel, those involved in cultural exchange and study, those who want to learn and be reminded of life lessons gleaned through the documentaries of others, and those who simply want a reminder of the goodness of people. This book would serve as an excellent resource for any study-abroad course or program, as well as courses on language education, teacher education, educational foundation, multicultural education, and human growth and development.

Best Practices in STEM Education

Innovative Approaches from Einstein Fellow Alumni Second Edition

New York, 2018

Science, technology, engineering, and mathematics (STEM) education are seen by leaders from across the globe as key to economic success and prosperity. The goal of Best Practices in STEM Education: Innovative Approaches from Einstein Fellow Alumni, Second Edition is to improve the state of STEM education, not only in the United States, but internationally as well—good education anywhere is good for education everywhere. As the body of STEM-learning research grows, this second volume provides the unique perspective of nationally recognized educators who have spent, collectively, more than 600,000 hours at the interface between teaching and learning. The 24 chapters included in this volume are the product of years of practice, mistakes, reflection, and refinement. They provide the experiential pragmatism backed by research so desired by practitioners. Each chapter communicates how its author has implemented a specific STEM practice in the classroom and how the practice might be modified for use in other classrooms, schools, and learning environments. These are stories of success, as well as stories of struggle. Readers of this second edition will gain powerful insight about what really works when it comes to teaching and learning. Best Practices in STEM Education: Innovative Approaches from Einstein Fellow Alumni, Second Edition will serve as an excellent resource for use in any science, technology, engineering, and mathematics teaching methods course, and no professional education library, K through college, should be without a copy.

The Complexities of Learning Arabic in the 21st Century examines how of the four levels of difficulty and hundreds of languages spoken worldwide, Arabic is considered a category 4, which means it is among the most difficult languages to learn. While Modern Standard Arabic (Fusha) is most frequently taught, it is the native language of no country or people. However, the many regional dialects (Amiyya), often dismissed by educators, make up the living language of Arabic. Due to its linguistic complexities, educators are divided on how to teach Arabic in domestic language programs in the United States and in study abroad programs in the Arab world. An investigation into programs catering to Americans learning Arabic as a foreign language revealed a heavy emphasis on reading and writing in MSA, but scant attention given to speaking and listening in at least one dialect, the language of the people—dialects. In Complexities of Learning Arabic in the 21st Century, recommendations are made for improving pedagogy and materials so that students can gain genuine communicative competence in Arabic, which means not only understanding MSA, but also speaking and listening in at least one dialect, the language of the people.

Ideal for courses in teaching Arabic as a foreign language&language teaching methods.

Children’s Environmental Identity Development: Negotiating Inner and Outer Tensions in Natural-World Socialization focuses on a timely topic, environmental identity development in children, drawing together theories and research from distinct fields including environmental education, education for sustainability, environmental psychology, sociology, and child development to enrich understandings and practices. The book proposes a theoretical framework for considering how children’s identity in/with/for nature evolves through formative experiences. Specifically, the author draws from psychosocial developmental theories and an extensive body of literature exploring young children’s perspectives, feelings, experiences, and interactions with place and their environments, to further understanding of children’s Environmental Identity Development (EID). EID, or the natural world socialization of young children, considers not only how the natural environment affects the growth and development of young children, but also how children, as they grow and develop, shape and influence natural settings. Such childhood relations/bonds with their environment are explicitly linked to familial, sociocultural, geographical, and educational contexts. Children’s Environmental Identity Development will be of interest to undergraduate and graduate students and academics from diverse fields including environmental education, children’s geography, child development, environmental psychology, landscape architecture, environmental and sustainability studies, sociology, and early childhood education. It may be used in undergraduate and graduate courses focused on children and environment, environmental and place-based education, children’s geographies, child development, and the sociology of childhood. While the book is primarily theoretical and descriptive, the use of relatively accessible language, vignettes, and figures will also make it of interest to teachers, policymakers, parents and others genuinely concerned with children’s identity formation with other human beings and the more-than-human natural world.

Ideal for undergraduate and graduate courses in Environmental Education, Early Childhood Education, Place-based Education, Ecopsychology, Environmental Psychology, Child Development, Environmental Sociology, Sociology of Childhood, and Sustainability Studies.

Written during a time period characterized by catalyzing Indigenous environmental movements such as Idle No More, political upheaval, and the final years of Canada’s Truth and Reconciliation Commission, Protest as Pedagogy: Teaching, Learning, and Indigenous Environmental Movements was motivated by Gregory Lowan-Trudeau’s personal experiences as an activist, educator, and researcher. Insights from interviews with activists and educators in a variety of school, community, and post-secondary contexts are presented in relation to teaching and learning during, and in response to, Indigenous environmental movements. Looking towards future possibilities, the rise of renewable energy development by Indigenous communities across Canada is also considered. Throughout Protest as Pedagogy, these inquiries are guided by a theoretical framework built on concepts such as decolonization, Herbert Marcuse’s repressive tolerance, Elliott Eisner’s three curricula, and broader fields of study such as social movement learning, critical media literacy, Indigenous media studies, and environmental communication. Protest as Pedagogy is of interest to educators, researchers, and activists alike.

Learning from Bad Practice in Environmental and Sustainability Education illuminates the notion of bad practice from the perspective of environmental and sustainability education (ESE) and how it is possible to learn from it in order to avoid the relentless pitfalls and blind spots that are part of any educational field. Combining lessons from Danish and South Korean NGOs involved in both formal and non-formal ESE with emerging theoretical perspectives on education, the important question is: Why do practitioners, educators and researchers have such a hard time dealing with the challenges of bad practice and is it possible to understand bad practice as not only something that mars the educational purpose of ESE, but also as something that at the same time protects the very ideals we find in the fields. Through empirical analysis, and theoretical perspectives from Jacques Lacan and Slavoj Žižek, Learning from Bad Practice in Environmental and Sustainability Education argues how we, as teachers, practitioners and researchers can learn from bad practice and move beyond the comfortable position of finger pointing and push for more genuine good practice.

During the last few decades, many university presidents and provosts have expressed an intent to internationalize their institutions to equip students with the broad intellectual skills necessary to succeed in the global twenty-first century. However, these well-intentioned calls for internationalization have remained little more than rhetoric. Obstacles embedded in developing faculty engagement in internationalization are largely responsible for this inability to turn rhetoric into reality. This groundbreaking second edition of The Twenty-First Century University identifies what successful institutions have done to overcome endogenous challenges and successfully engage faculty in the internationalization process. The book provides updated case studies on two exemplary institutions, demonstrating how these institutions operationalized Childress’ «5 I’s of Faculty Engagement in Internationalization Model» (including intentionality, investments, infrastructure, institutional networks, and individual support) from 2007 through 2017. This book also presents a typology of strategies for faculty engagement in internationalization that higher education leaders can use to increase their faculty’s international teaching, research, and service on campus, regionally, and abroad. Finally, this second edition includes a model of faculty engagement in internationalization within academic departments that institutional leaders can use to ensure that explicit connections are made between internationalization and individual disciplines.

Ideal for graduate courses in international higher education, academic administration, higher education administration, and internationalization of higher education.

Coordinate Colleges for American Women explores the history of the coordinate college—a separate school of higher learning for women connected to an older, all-male institution. This book places special emphasis on three (previously all-male) liberal arts colleges located in the Midwest and upstate New York. They established women’s coordinate colleges in the years following World War II, but ended them by 1980, becoming fully coeducational. The author draws on new primary sources to show that, in each case, a coordinate college was created to meet the converging interests of the founding institution—not to improve the education of women. The work is set in the context of four major social movements during the mid-to-late twentieth century involving civil rights, student rights, antiwar protest, and women’s liberation.

Critical Language Pedagogy: Interrogating Language, Dialects, and Power in Teacher Education demonstrates how critical approaches to language and dialects are an essential part of social justice work in literacy education. The text details the largest and most comprehensive study ever conducted on teachers’ language beliefs and learning about dialects, power, and identity. It describes the experiences of over 300 pre- and in-service teachers from across the United States who participated in a course on how to enact Critical Language Pedagogy in their English classrooms. Through detailed analyses and descriptions, the authors demonstrate how the course changed teachers’ beliefs about language, literacy, and their students. The book also presents information about the effectiveness of the mini-course, variations in the responses of teachers from different regions of the United States, and the varying language beliefs of teachers of color and White teachers. The authors present the entire mini-course so that readers can incorporate it into their own classes, making the book practical as well as informative for teachers, teacher educators, and educational researchers. Critical Language Pedagogy: Interrogating Language, Dialects, and Power in Teacher Education provides a much-needed theoretical explanation of Critical Language Pedagogy and, just as importantly, a detailed description of teacher learning and a Critical Language Pedagogy curriculum that readers can use in K-12, college, and teacher education classrooms.

Autism from the Inside Out

A Handbook for Parents, Early Childhood, Primary, Post-Primary and Special School Settings

CHF 31.– / €D 29.95 / €A 30.00 / € 27.50 / £ 21.– / US-$ 30.95

Autism from the Inside Out is the first book to focus on providing Irish parents, early childhood practitioners and primary, post-primary and special school teachers with effective strategies for supporting children with autism spectrum difference at home and in educational settings. Presenting contributions from a range of national and international experts in education and psychology, the volume emerged from an evaluation of education provision commissioned by Ireland’s National Council for Special Education, which clearly identified a need for additional guidance, advice and support for parents and teachers.

The book rejects «disorder» in favour of «difference», emphasizing the importance of a child-centred approach and the dangers of over-generalization. It includes chapters on effective teaching strategies to promote learning; responding to children’s strengths and needs through individualized planning; assessment practices; the role of the Special Needs Assistant; managing transitions; the environment as the third teacher; promoting children’s wellbeing; and effective leadership for inclusion.

Ideal for courses in Teaching Methods for Students with Autism Spectrum Disorders.

Classroom Teaching
An Introduction
Second Edition

Classroom Teaching is an introductory text that challenges the antiquated ways that teaching and curriculum have been presented. By adding chapters to Joe L. Kincheloe’s original volume, this second edition gives a fresh, politicized viewpoint of power and politics in an era of corporatized education. The authors set the scene to introduce cutting-edge notions of teaching, knowledge-making, and ways of seeing the world. The essays included in this second edition of Classroom Teaching present a critical pedagogical approach to a socially-just praxis of schooling and being in schools. This edition also includes essential essays on diversity, sexuality, and media which are contemporaneous with today’s concerns in society. Pre-service teachers, interns, and teacher educators in North America will find Classroom Teaching engaging and unique as they commit to an informed vision of educating our children and youth.

Ideal for courses in Teaching and Learning; Introduction to teaching; Schools and Schooling; and Introduction for Preservice Teachers.

Performance Training & Tactics for Classroom Teachers

New York, 2018

Mutated Symbols in Law and Pop Culture

---

Teaching Teachers With Theater! explores day-to-day classroom performance challenges K–12 teachers face and how the practice of certain theater techniques used to train actors can improve a teacher’s student engagement and connection. Jim Senti’s work exposes K–12 classroom teachers to the activities and training that will help them become a more comfortable, connective, exciting, and engaging teacher in the classroom. Teaching Teachers With Theater! defines typical challenges teachers face in the classroom. The activities in each chapter vary from how the reader can improve their body language, voice, and physicality to illustrating how developing acute observation can help train a teacher’s empathy and compassion. This book also explains how improvisation games help train a teacher’s ability to deal with surprises in the classroom and even offers some tips on how to tell a great story. Teaching Teachers With Theater! translates the vocabulary used in theater to a vocabulary a teacher often uses and gives teachers simple step-by-step activities, which could be extremely useful in faculty development. In the end, these practices will help teachers become stronger communicators by learning to be far more comfortable with performing in order to genuinely connect with their students. If a teacher is comfortable in their ability to communicate, they will have a stronger connection with their students. They will without question become far more entertaining to their students. This engagement will solve the majority of classroom management issues.

Mutated Symbols in Law and Pop Culture plays with iconic representations of fusion, liminality, dispossession, and development. Mutations embody life because they illustrate phases and progression. Mutations and mutants fascinate the public. They are depicted by artists, including James Franco, Cary Elwes, Sara Bareilles, The Smashing Pumpkins, Quvenzhané Wallis, Pablo Picasso, Alicia Keys, Katy Perry, Debbie Reynolds, Maddie Ziegler, the Olsen twins, Mark McGrath, and Paul Simon. This book discusses physiological manifestations of mutations, such as beauty and specialness (e.g., white tigers); aesthetic (e.g., redheads); innovation (e.g., Mormonism); and prowess (e.g., tuxedos). Mutated Symbols in Law and Pop Culture focuses on strata that are popularly contemplated in culture and by the law; for example, primordial states (e.g., sleep); supranatural physicality (e.g., bionic); irresistible impulse (e.g., psychopath); queer semantic shift (e.g., «gay»); and class (e.g., Leo). Mutated Symbols in Law and Pop Culture interweaves interdisciplinary analyses because mutations exceed defined ranges. For example, symbology and culture evocatively synergize in constitutional law. A symbol becomes legally protected if it is intended to communicate a particularized message that is likely to be understood by observers. This book demonstrates that mutations may not be sufficiently protected as speech. Even though the symbolism of mutations is the subject of study, the meaning of specific symbols may not be understood by the public. Symbols of mutation may identify cultural desires, embrace zeniths, and transform mundane or worn events into fantasies. Perhaps as a means of preserving, defending, and protecting mutations, culture has exhibited and spotlighted them.

The Vigilant God (Revisited) by Horton Davies, a non-conformist minister who taught in the Religion department of Princeton University, and attended Presbyterian and Episcopal churches regularly, seems a sort of reconsideration, at the ripe age of 76, of the belief that God is still active in history. It is a reassessment of the theology of Providence, in the thought of four major Christian theologians, Augustine, Aquinas, Calvin and Barth, of their views on predestination, theodicy and free will, leading the author to consider the role it might have for the future of humanity. The book starts with sketches of the biblical sources relating to Providence, predestination, election and reprobation. Davies sees Augustine’s doctrine of Providence and his view of evil as privatio boni as greatly influenced by Plato and his followers. He dwells on Aquinas the man, his life and his character, open to Aristotle and his Jewish and Arab commentators, before plunging into the structure of his encyclopedic thought and works. The author appreciates Calvin’s regard for Scripture as a means of illumination of the Spirit, but rejects the pastor’s views on predestination as tyrannical and unjust, and believes that Barth’s positive insistence on God’s universal mercy is necessary against the horrors perpetrated in the twentieth century.

The Profound Limitations of Knowledge
El len K. Wondra
The Theology and Practice of Authority in the Episcopal Church and Anglican Communion

ebook

This book analyzes current conflicts concerning authority in the Anglican church and offers a new framework for addressing them. It argues that authority in the church is fundamentally relational rather than juridical. All members of the church have authority to engage in discerning the church’s identity, direction, and mission. Most of this authority is exercised in personal interactions and group practices of consultation and direction. Formal authority in the church confers power so responsibilities can be fulfilled. Church relations always include conflict, which may be creative and helpful rather than divisive. Conflict arises because persons and groups follow Christ in ways related to their own cultural context while also being in communion with others. Communion in the church requires embracing diversity, recognizing and respecting others’ perspectives, and working together to discover and create common ground. Today’s church needs more participatory forms of governance and decision-making that are conciliar and synodal.

Ideal for graduate courses in theology.

History and Philosophy of Science. Heresies, Crossroads, and Intersections. Vol. 7 pb.

The Profound Limitations of Knowledge explores the limitations of knowledge and argues that neither reasoning nor direct or indirect observations can be trusted. We cannot even assign probabilities to claims of what we can know. Furthermore, for any set of data, there are an infinite number of possible interpretations. Evidence suggests that we live in a participatory universe. That is, our observations shape reality.

The Navajo language (Diné bizaad) has a vocabulary of landscape terms that allow speakers to communicate about their environment. This book documents that vocabulary and provides photographic illustration of many of the terms. The meanings of these terms seldom match English-language terms one-to-one. Terms of include explicit reference to earth materials such as water or rock/stone. Rather than alphabetically, book is organized by material and form categories. This dictionary should be a valuable resource for language preservation in schools and elsewhere, and for linguists, anthropologists, geographers, and earth scientists interested in indigenous conceptualization of landscape and environment.

Lengua, Cultura y Literatura en los Estudios Graduados

New York, 2018. XXII, 426 pp., 14 il., 16 tablas

Doce profesores con amplia experiencia educativa ofrecen este libro para ayudar al lector a interrelacionar conocimientos en los campos de Lengua, Cultura y Literatura. Se trata de un libro único en su género, de contenido enciclopédico, sin ser una enciclopedia, y de planteamiento didáctico, con muchos ejemplos y ejercicios, a partir de una idea nuclear. Esa idea central es cómo hacer cosas en Lengua, Cultura y Literatura a partir de los conocimientos que se adquieren en cada capítulo en un texto divulgativo de nivel culto, pero no especializado. El público es, en principio, el compuesto por estudiantes universitarios de español en universidades de todo el mundo. Algunos de ellos tienen el español como lengua materna y otros como lengua segunda. De hecho, el experimento de aplicación práctica de la primera redacción del libro se hizo con estudiantes de las dos categorías. Muchas más personas estarán interesadas en la lectura, porque les ofrece una visión de conjunto interrelacionada, algo que es excepcional y sumamente valioso en el estado actual de los conocimientos. En el uso didáctico, la Sociedad del Conocimiento permite recurrir a in-formación complementaria cuando sea preciso, lo cual evita sobrecargar el libro. Éste es lo más ágil posible, para permitir una lectura seguida de los ejercicios correspondientes. Para escribir un libro tan especial se ha contado con un grupo de doce especialistas, siete mujeres y cinco hombres, de centros de Europa y América, todos ellos empeñados en ofrecer al lector unas páginas para que trabaje y disfrute haciéndolo.

This book focuses on communicative classroom language for bilingual education and aims to equip language and content teachers with real, updated English expressions of direct relevance in CLIL (Content and Language Integrated Learning) contexts. To this end, it presents a theoretical backdrop with the rationale underpinning the proposal and three sets of tried-and-tested original activities, classified according to type of lexical chunk, function, and level (Infant, Primary, Secondary, and Tertiary Education). Students are encouraged to move from more controlled and basic stages of identification of these types of communicative chunks towards a freer type of production, through a wide variety of originally designed and piloted activities based on multimodal texts (gap-filling, matching, tic-tac-toe, sentence completion, error correction, T/F, multiple choice, ordering, odd-one-out). A full glossary is also provided with 330 useful expressions, as well as an answer key and printable posters and cut-outs which are directly applicable in the CLIL classroom.

For teachers and teacher educators striving to address a growing number of state mandates relating to the education of English language learners (ELLs), Educating English Language Learners in an Inclusive Environment, Second Edition provides a reader-friendly survey of key topics, including: legal and professional imperatives, cultural concerns, linguistics, literacy instruction, assessment, policy, and politics. This overview will be useful to in-service teachers with little or no preparation for working with ELLs but who nevertheless face legislative demands to teach both academic content and English. It will also be useful to teacher educators trying to squeeze preparation for working with ELLs into already overflowing teacher preparation programs. Though many try, no one text can provide exhaustive information; there is simply too much to learn. This second edition instead provides readers with a road map to critical topics and to specific resources they can use independently to learn more, as they will surely need to do.

Developments in ICTs have altered the fabric of youth culture in terms of a young person’s access to information and ability to communicate with a global audience. The conditions, opportunities, and limitations of using digital media are different for marginalized urban youth. In order to harness the educational value of digital media in the lives of disenfranchised youth, we must understand its potential as a means of empowerment. Central to Digital Youth Praxis is the development of a conceptual framework called digital youth praxis (DYP) that offers praxis orientation of ICTs that are critical, creative, and grounded in social justice. The digital youth praxis framework includes three tenets: the DYP H3 model, used for understanding context and ICT creation practices; the DYP phases, which offers six phases for critical ICT making; and the DYP typology which offers insight on three different levels of ICT engagement and what they include. The purpose of this conceptual framework discussed in Digital Youth Praxis is to clarify concepts and propose interdisciplinary relationships among concepts; provide a context for interpreting the findings; explain observations and creative content; and to encourage theory development that is useful to practice. Providing insight based on community-based fieldwork with marginalized youth, the interdisciplinary nature of Digital Youth Praxis is an excellent guide for formal and informal educators interested or engaged in youth media productions.

mediated responses to globalization is a compelling, interdisciplinary exploration of how media practices and communication rituals are connected to larger economic, social and political processes in a globalizing world. Through a rich variety of media texts, authors examine how daily, mundane, and interpersonal processes help shape ‘our’ place in the world, a placement that is integrally connected to social relations at the global level. Denoting a sense of geography as demarcating diverse social positionings (Moore, 2012), place is understood as the result of historical and contemporary discourses occurring on a range of scales (Tuan, and political contexts. The authors argue that the construction, restoration, configuration, and representation of place is an important project at multiple levels: what meanings are derived from it, what meanings are infused, who are the key players, what power struggles are inherent—these issues offer rich areas of

Religion Across Television Genres: Community, Orange Is the New Black, The Walking Dead, and Supernatural

New York, 2018

Religion Across Television Genres connects communication theories to the religious content of TV programs from an array of forms and content genres, specifically, the NBC comedy Community, the critically-acclaimed Netflix series Orange Is the New Black, AMC’s international megahit The Walking Dead, and the CW’s long-running fan-favorite Supernatural. Its contemporary relevancy that makes Religion Across Television Genres ideal for use as a library resource, scholarly reference, and textbook for both undergraduate and graduate courses in mass media, religious studies, and popular culture.

The Changing Education for Journalism and the Communication Occupations: The Impact of Labor Markets

New York, 2018. XXII, 264 pp., 48 b/w ill., 33 tables

Mass Communication and Journalism. Vol. 22

This book provides a unique perspective on journalism and communication education, drawing on extensive, detailed data across time to examine the evolution of education for journalism and related communication occupations such as public relations and advertising. It demonstrates how journalism and communication education adapted to forces within the university as well as forces from outside the university. Particular attention is given to the impact of the labor markets to which journalism and communication education is linked. The analysis shows dramatically how dependent employers are on journalism and communication education, how educational institutions have changed to accommodate female and minority students, and how the labor market has responded to the graduates produced. Part history, part sociological analysis, this book will change the reader’s understanding of education for journalism, public relations, advertising and the related occupations. It also offers insights about what the future of education in these fields holds.

Ideal for undergraduate and graduate courses in journalism, mass communication, and mass communication history.

Spiritual News: Reporting Religion Around the World

New York, 2018. VIII, 418 pp., 15 b/w ill., 32 tables

The media’s coverage of religion is an important question for academic researchers, given the central role which news media play in ensuring that people are up-to-date with religion news developments. Not only is there a lack of treatment of the subject in other countries, but there is also the absence of comparative study on news and religion. A key question is how the media, the political system, the religions themselves, the culture, and the economy influence how religion is reported in different countries. Spiritual News: Reporting Religion Around the World is intended to fill this gap. The book is divided into six parts: an introductory section; the newsgathering process; religion reporting in different regions; media events concerning religion; political and social change and the role of religion news; future trends.

Ideal for undergraduate and graduate courses in Religion and Popular Culture; Reporting Religion and Spirituality; Media and Religion in American History; Reporting on Islam; Christianity and Culture; Writing about Religion and Spirituality.

Reshaping the News
Community, Engagement, and Editors

New York, 2018

Reshaping the News: Community, Engagement, and Editors is the culmination of a six-year search for an economic resolution to the digital business conundrum facing the newspaper industry. Today’s media tends to generate increasing impacts, allowing journalists to continue reporting without considering the audience’s increasingly dominant role in a story’s longevity. This renders newsrooms as managed rather than led and turns editors into facilitators – managing project-driven journalism, attempting to match publishers’ expectations of diversified income streams, and providing reporters with increased autonomy. In fact, newsrooms require a new kind of leadership, one that rethinks its relationship with the audience. Reshaping the News argues for that alternative, deconstructing the reporting and editing relationship and illustrating the ideal version of editorial oversight. Author George Sylvie dissects reporter communities and culture, as well as the connection between journalism and geographic space/management. The book also examines whether journalists have developed the appropriate infrastructure to assure credibility and avoid potential mishaps, misconduct, and misrepresentation. Though the innovative, untraditional approach to audience engagement outlined within challenges journalistic boundaries, Reshaping the News posits its new model as necessary and of potential lasting value to the field of journalism.

Ideal for undergraduate and graduate courses in communications, journalism, media management, media economics, and media entrepreneurship.

Who’s Reporting Africa Now?

Non-Governmental Organizations, Journalists, and Multimedia

New York, 2018. XVI, 280 pp., 6 coloured ill.

As news organizations cut correspondent posts and foreign bureaus, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) have begun to expand into news reporting. Why and how do journalists use the photographs, video, and audio that NGOs produce? What effects does this have on the kinds of stories told about Africa? And how have these developments changed the nature of journalism and NGO-work? Who’s Reporting Africa Now?: Non-Governmental Organizations, Journalists, and Multimedia is the first book to address these questions—using frank interviews and internal documents to shed light on the workings of major news organizations and NGOs, collaborating with one another in specific news production processes. These contrasting case studies are used to illuminate the complex moral and political economies underpinning such journalism, involving not only NGO press officers and journalists but also field workers, freelancers, private foundations, social media participants, businesspeople, and advertising executives.

Ideal for undergraduate and graduate courses in African studies, Journalism and Communication, International Development, Photography, Political Communication, Human Rights, and International Relations.

Human-Machine Communication

Rethinking Communication, Technology, and Ourselves

New York, 2018

From virtual assistants to social robots, people are increasingly interacting with intelligent and highly communicative technologies throughout their daily lives. This shift from communicating with people to communicating with people and machines challenges how scholars have theorized and studied communication. Human-Machine Communication: Rethinking Communication, Technology, & Ourselves addresses this transition in how people communicate and who—or what—they communicate with and the implications of this evolution for communication research. Geared toward scholars interested in people’s interactions with technology, this book serves as an introduction to HMC as a specific area of study within communication (encompassing HCI, HRI, and HAI) and to the research possibilities of HMC. This collection includes papers presented as part of a scholarly conference on HMC along with invited works from noted researchers. Topics include defining HMC, theoretical approaches to HMC, applications of HMC, and the larger implications of HMC for self and society. The research presented here focuses on people’s interactions with multiple technologies—artificial intelligence, algorithms, and robots—used within different contexts—home, workplace, education, journalism, and healthcare—from a variety of epistemological and methodological approaches—empirical, rhetorical, and critical/cultural. Overall, Human-Machine Communication: Rethinking Communication, Technology, & Ourselves provides readers with an understanding of HMC in a way that supports and promotes further scholarly inquiry in a growing area of communication research.

Ideal for graduate courses in communication, media studies, human-machine communication, communication and technology, media and society, and social robotics.
Entertainment is big business. Whether it’s a favorite television show, an artist at the top of the music charts, a blockbuster film, or a hometown sports team, people love entertainment. In this introduction to the entertainment industry, Andi Stein and Beth Bingham Georges provide a glimpse inside the industry to show how each segment operates as well as the challenges and trends within the business. Each chapter addresses a different segment of the entertainment industry including: Film, Television, Radio, Theatre, Music, Sports, Theme Parks and Shopping. The book is designed as an introductory text for entertainment studies courses and as an overview of the industry for those looking to pursue careers in the field of entertainment.

Ideal for undergraduate and graduate courses in Communication and Entertainment and Tourism Studies.

Strategic development is one of the most daunting challenges that faces any professional, no matter the field. After all, stakes are high. Developing effective strategies can put you on the path to becoming a trusted advisor and a valued employee. The communication strategy framework introduced in this handbook has been designed to help professionals make targeted choices toward strategic communication. Taking an iterative approach and continually reflecting on whether your choices remain congruent enables you to continually adapt to changing circumstances while staying in command. Linear planning models are ineffective. Quick strategy development can revolutionize the communication function and strengthen the relationship amongst members of a professional team. Linking communication and business strategy is the number one challenge for today’s communication practitioners. Many CEOs still view the communication department as no more than as a tactical entity providing outreach but little else. It is time to fundamentally rethink how strategic communication is developed and start using modern tools to do this. The communication strategy framework facilitates the communication professional to forcefully and efficiently make the right choices. It compels individuals to think about how communication can contribute to achieving the organization or client’s goals. As a result, it provides a clear picture of your communication strategy in one page by putting superfluous details aside and concentrating on the essentials. The communication strategy framework has proven to be an instant eye-opener for clients and other stakeholders. A best-seller amongst professionals in the Netherlands, it is available for the first time in English. This step-by-step guide to creating strategic communication will help communicators of all types—professionals and clients to students and teachers!

Women, Feminism, and Pop Politics: From «Bitch» to «Badass» and Beyond Women, Feminism, and Pop Politics: From «Bitch» to «Badass» and Beyond examines the negotiation of feminist politics and gendered political leadership in twenty-first century U.S. popular culture. In a wide-ranging survey of texts—which includes memes and digital discourses, embodied feminist performances, parody and infotainment, and television comedy and drama—contributing authors assess the ways in which popular culture discourses both reveal and reshape citizens’ understanding of feminist politics and female political figures. Two archetypes of female identity figure prominently in its analysis. «Bitch» is a frame that reflects the twentieth-century anxiety about powerful women as threatening and unfeminine, trapping political women within the double bind between femininity and competence. «Badass», recognizes women’s capacity to lead but does so in a way that deflects attention away from the persistence of sexist stereotyping and cultural misogyny. Additionally, as depictions of political women become increasingly complex and varied, fictional characters and actual women are beginning to move beyond the bitch and badass frames, fashioning collaborative and comic modes of leadership suited to the new global milieu. This book will be of interest to students and scholars interested in communication, U.S. political culture, gender and leadership, and women in media.

Debating Migration as a Public Issue
National Publics and Transnational Fields

From New York, 2018

Debating Migration as a Public Problem: National Publics and Transnational Fields is the first book to examine the symbolic construction of intra-E.U. labor migration in the public sphere of the sending state, taking Romania as a case study. The theoretical and analytical frameworks adopted bring fresh insights into the research of what has become a distinct socio-economic phenomenon after the dismantling of communist regimes in the 1990s. Every chapter looks at labor migration through the lens of the public claims, modes of engagement and symbolic hierarchies constituted in the media, viewed as arenas of debate and actors in the transnational social field. The wide applicability of the approach and the relevance of the findings to current developments in the European Union make the book a valuable resource for academics, researchers and students with an interest in media discourse, economic migration in the European Union, transnationalism, diaspora, and the public sphere.

Ideal for Master’s courses in migration, media and communication, and discourse analysis.

Poaching Politics
Online Communication during the 2016 US Presidential Election

From New York, 2018

The 2016 US election was ugly, divisive, maddening, and influential. In this provocateur, Booth, Davisson, Hess, and Hinck explore the effect that everyday people had on the political process. From viewing candidates as celebrities, to finding fan communities within the political spectrum, to joining others online in spreading misinformation, the true influence in 2016 was the online participant. Poaching Politics brings together researchers and scholars from Media Studies, Political Communication, and Rhetoric to provide an interdisciplinary perspective on the role of participatory cultures in shaping the 2016 US Presidential Election. Poaching Politics heralds a new way of creating and understanding shifts in the nature of political communication in the digital age.

Ideal for undergraduate and graduate courses in Digital Rhetoric; Rhetoric and Digital Media; Rhetoric in Digital Environments; Rhetoric of Digital Literacy; Communication and Technology; New Media and Culture; Introduction to New Media Studies; Contemporary Rhetorical Theory; Foundations of Rhetorical Theory; Fandom and Active Audiences; Fandom and Participatory Cultures; Media, Democracy, and the Public; and Politics and New Media.
Decolonizing Native American Rhetoric: Communicating Self-Determination

Casey Ryan Kelly • Jason Edward Black (eds.)

As survivors of genocide, mnemonicicide, colonization, and forced assimilation, American Indians face a unique set of rhetorical exigencies in US public culture. Decolonizing Native American Rhetoric: Communicating Self-Determination brings together critical essays on the political and cultural rhetoric of American indigenous communities, including essays on the politics of public memory, culture and identity controversies, stereotypes and caricatures, masking, cinematic representations, and resistance movements and environmental justice. This volume brings together recognized scholars and emerging voices in a series of critical projects that question the intersections of civic identity, including how American indigenous rhetoric is complicated by or made more dynamic when refracted through the lens of gender, race, class, and national identity. The authors assembled in this project employ a variety of rhetorical methods, theories, and texts committed to the larger academic movement toward the decolonization of Western scholarship. This project illustrates the invaluable contributions of American Indian voices and perspectives to the study of rhetoric and political communication.

Ideal for advanced undergraduate and graduate courses in Rhetoric, American Studies, American Indian studies, and Ethnic Studies.

Paris in Architecture, Literature, and Art is a textbook in cultural studies that capitalizes on the little exposure liberal arts students have to architecture and the widespread popularity of Paris across the curriculum. Designed for a college course in the humanities, the textbook is also suitable for a high school course or a study abroad program in Paris. The book focuses on Paris, which throughout history has been the stage and experimental ground for artists and intellectuals from all over the world, making it the crucible of Western thought and consummate material for an interdisciplinary study. Each chapter presents interdisciplinary study. Each chapter presents

In the tradition of the medieval cycle plays performed for education, enrichment, and entertainment, A New Corpus Christi: Plays for Churches presents 25 short plays and skits with one or two scripts for each of 21 events in the church year. The scripts range from celebratory pieces to problem plays to liturgical dramas to plays that call for no worship setting accouterments. The scripts will also provide discussion starters for Sunday school classes or small groups. And some of the plays might be grouped together as programs on particular topics such as poverty and homelessness or death and dying. This book also provides a resource for university and seminary courses in liturgics and worship.

Iconic Russian writer Anton Chekhov is recognized as the most produced playwright in the world after William Shakespeare—that is, he is the most produced and most highly regarded modern playwright in English translation. Why is this so? Chekhov’s style models our behaviors and aspirations in the most alluring and intricate ways, unmatched in playwriting to the present day. Chekhov’s plays determined Realism in language and acting practice from the late 19th century to the present.

This unique, comprehensive study explores the history of translation, contemporary and controversial approaches to stage translation, the notion of «action» from Aristotle to Adler (and beyond), and Anton Chekhov’s inimitable dramaturgy. English translations, adaptations and versions of The Seagull, Uncle Vanya, The Three Sisters, and The Cherry Orchard are each considered from the actor’s points of view, from the page to the stage.

The nature of stage translation has recently undergone novel and provocative changes; how can someone who does not know the source language adapt or translate a play? It is done frequently, and the outcomes are investigated herein. For the translator as well as practitioners, understanding theatre craft is essential to producing playable and engaging productions. Differences in the language, punctuation, syntax, sound, rhythm, stage directions and what appears on the written page in various translations affect the work of the actor on the scripts.

The purpose of this inquiry is not to definitively evaluate or interpret Chekhov’s plays, but to discover approaches to working on plays in translation, and to determine practical tools we may use in the analysis of dramatic form, as well as human behavior. This volume includes selections from 142 translations and translators of all four plays, and a Glossary of Acting Terms that help describe concepts for practical script analysis.

Ideal for undergraduate and graduate courses on Chekhov, Acting, Russian Translation, and Translation in Theatre.
What does it mean to be white in a society that proclaims race meaningless, yet is deeply divided by race? In the face of pervasive racial inequality and segregation, most white people cannot answer that question. In the second edition of this seminal text, Robin DiAngelo reveals the factors that make this question so difficult: mis-education about what racism is; ideologies such as individualism and colorblindness; segregation; and the belief that to be complicit in racism is to be an immoral person. These factors contribute to what she terms white racial illiteracy. Speaking as a white person to other white people, DiAngelo clearly and compellingly takes readers through an analysis of white socialization. Weaving research, analysis, stories, images, and familiar examples, she provides the framework needed to develop white racial literacy. She describes how race shapes the lives of white people, explains what makes racism so hard to see, identifies common white racial patterns, and speaks back to popular narratives that work to deny racism. Written as an accessible overview on white identity from an anti-racist framework, What Does It Mean to Be White? is an invaluable resource for members of diversity and anti-racism programs and study groups, and students of sociology, psychology, education, and other disciplines. This revised edition features two new chapters, including one on DiAngelo’s influential concept of white fragility. Written to be accessible both within and without academia, this revised edition also features discussion questions, an index, and a glossary.

Congratulations to Robin DiAngelo – What Does It Mean to Be White is a Peter Lang Bestseller!

Philosophy and Theory in Higher Education
Journal Editor: John E. Petrovic

This first issue of Philosophy and Theory in Higher Education tackles the question of the Anthropocene as context and as concept in and for the study of higher education. Earth’s dominant species, the human, now rules precariously and wrestles with the power to manipulate planetary processes. So, what now? How can we configure the role and relevancy of higher education in such ontologically and epistemologically challenging conditions? What does it mean for higher education that the human is remaking its environment and consequently, remaking itself? What future/now for the institution that was built to generate, harbor, share, and provide leadership for the knowledge that might support the human condition and its social experiments at living? These are the abstractions at stake in recognizing the Anthropocene as a reality worth wrestling with in the study and practice of higher education.

Media Ecology: An Approach to Understanding the Human Condition

Lance Strate

Lance Strate presents a clear and concise explanation of media ecology, a field of inquiry defined as the study of media as environments. Lance Strate presents a clear and concise explanation of an intellectual tradition concerned with much more than understanding media, but rather with understanding the conditions that shape us as human beings, drive human history, and determine the prospects for our survival as a species.

A Half-Century Perspective

New York, 2017. XXVIII, 444 pp., 117 b/w ill.

More than a decade has passed since the last comprehensive survey of U.S. journalists was carried out in 2002 by scholars at Indiana University—and the news and the journalists who produce it have undergone dramatic changes and challenges. The American Journalist in the Digital Age is based on interviews with a national probability sample of nearly 1,100 U.S. journalists in the fall of 2013 to document the tremendous changes that have occurred in U.S. journalism in the past decade, many of them due to the rise of new communication technologies and social media. This survey of U.S. journalists updates the findings from previous studies and asks new questions about the impact of new communication technologies and social media. This survey of journalists updates the findings from previous studies and asks new questions about the impact of new communication technologies and social media.

The American Journalist in the Digital Age

Lars Willnat • David H. Weaver • G. Cleveland Wilhoit

The American Journalist in the Digital Age seeks to build upon the agenda set in motion by the first volume, which demonstrated the breadth of research being conducted on volunteers. The focus of this second volume is on the important issues related to volunteering in international and intercultural contexts. The chapters present empirical studies of volunteering divided into three sections. The first section includes six studies of volunteering in international and intercultural contexts. The chapters present empirical studies of volunteering divided into three sections. The first section includes six studies of volunteering.

Volunteering and Communication – Volume 2

Michael W. Kramer • Laurie K. Lewis • Loril M. Gossett (eds.)

This book won the 2017 Applied Communication Division Award for Outstanding Edited Book. The second section of Volunteering and Communication seeks to build upon the agenda set in motion by the first volume, which demonstrated the breadth of research being conducted on volunteers. The focus of this second volume is on the important issues related to volunteering in international and intercultural contexts. The chapters present empirical studies of volunteering divided into three sections. The first section includes six studies of volunteering. The second section includes studies of volunteers from the United States in other countries in Asia, Africa, and South America. The final section includes two studies of volunteers serving recent immigrants to their home country. This volume provides a unique focus by providing a more nuanced examination than the first volume did of some of the unique differences of volunteering in international and intercultural contexts. It is hoped the two books will stimulate additional research on volunteers.
