This work explores what utopian writers have said about economic inequality. Its transdisciplinary focus is literary utopias—novels of social theory—by authors seeking solutions to the problems of economic inequality engendered by the extremes of both poverty and wealth. It is not an economic study but an exploration in utopian social philosophy.

La brecha histórica causada por las diferencias de cosmología, cultura, geografía y pensamiento es tan amplia como la inmensidad del continente Asia-Europa y la del Océano Pacífico. Para que entendamos realmente la "China contemporánea", tenemos que encontrar las respuestas a la "China de hoy" a partir de la "China histórica".

The monograph builds upon the securitization theory of the Copenhagen School. The authors carry out research on the imposition of security threats using linguistic methods and focus on pressing social issues such as migration, the war in Ukraine, public health issues, economic crisis, and other 'pre-election' populist topics.

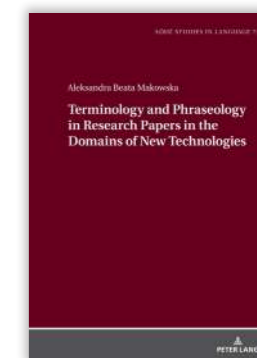

This book focuses on scientific terminology and phraseology in research papers in the domains of new technologies which remain to be highly specialized means of communicating. It approaches scientific communication both from the theoretical and practical perspective with the use of corpus linguistics methodology.

The Gravitational Pull Hypothesis is an attempt to provide a cognitive account for features of translated language. This book presents a number of studies aiming to test that hypothesis on several linguistic items. The results shed light not only on the hypothesis itself but also on the mixed-methods approach adopted in the book.

This collection contextualizes how rhetoric has helped and hindered the development of democratic principles in Central and Eastern Europe in the decades past the period of "transition." By examining the rhetoric of leaders and exchanges between them, this book argues for treating the leaders of the region with their own agency, rather than as agents of others.

Este libro contribuye a la descolonización de los estudios de memoria hispánicos. Aplica la perspectiva poscolonial y de colonial a los estudios de memoria. Aborda las memorias del pasado colonial español en África y Filipinas, así como la memoria de la esclavitud, en la actualidad y durante el franquismo. Analiza el archivo colonial del Protectorado Español de Marruecos, Sahara Occidental, Guinea Ecuatorial y Filipinas. Y estudia las complejas relaciones que conlleva el imperio, desde una perspectiva interdisciplinar. Asimismo, realiza propuestas sobre cómo encarar el estudio del pasado colonial y su memoria, y sobre cómo elaborar políticas de memoria poscoloniales, que confronten el racismo y la violencia colonial actual en el Estado español.

The book discusses how Polish scholars created an image of ancient Greece in the first half of the nineteenth century. In an era when Poles were deprived of their own independent state, classical philology, historiography, and literary studies became the arena of struggle to mark one's own subjectivity on the map of Europe's rival humanities.
